New Year's Resolutions

The popular tradition of making New Year's resolutions has origins in Ancient Babylon and Rome. The Babylonians would typically return farm equipment that they had borrowed during the year, while in Caesar's time Janus became the symbol for resolutions because he had two faces that could look to the past and into the future. Today we make New Year's Resolutions to try to improve some aspect of ourselves in the coming year. This sounds good but the sad truth is that most of us break them well before the year is out. In fact, a recent study found that 22% of people give up on their resolution in the first week. Prayer is the best solution.
